new agreement was reached that the collection would be returned to Gurlitt but he died shortly thereafter, leaving all his property - including a house and additional works stored at his residence in SalzburgAustria - to the Museum of Fine Arts Bern in Switzerland, which agreed to accept the collection minus any works suspected of being looted in November A considerable portion of the collection is in the form of prints and other "dealer stock" in addition to a smaller, but still noteworthy number of unique and more valuable works; initial sensationalist claims of the value of the collection being "in excess of 1 billion dollars" based on its size alone have proved to be unfounded, however the collection is certainly worth tens of millions of dollars. As soon as I saw it, I gasped and laughed at the same time.
